March 22 Meeting

Using Genealogy Software

The topic of the March meeting was 'Using Genealogy Software' presented by Donna Law, Mike Dowhan and Jerry Fikis.

Donna suggested that perhaps the best method to organize a family tree on your computer is to use a commercial software package such as Family Tree Maker (FTM) – though there are other products on the market which are just as effective.

Examples of Genealogy Software

Using FTM as a representative software package, Donna demonstrated how you can begin documenting your family tree by entering information about yourself and then include parents, grandparents and other relatives. Donna gave a few examples from her family tree. A 'recipe card' with information from newspapers, obituaries and family stories can also be included. She gave examples of various family tree charts with a variety of styles of family connections.

Donna also explained how these programs can help you share your genealogical information with others on the internet using popular sites such as Ancestry. Family tree information can be sent and received electronically by e-mail and printed as hard-copies for preservation purposes.

Mike Dowhan then demonstrated how these programs can help genealogists organize their source documents in one central location. These sources can be as diverse as parish records from Ukraine, Ocean arrivals forms, and almost any type of genealogy record that can be downloaded from Ancestry, FamilySearch, or other Internet websites. Copies of records on microfilm can be included if captured in digital format. As well using a scanner, paper records (e.g. family letters, newspaper clippings, photos) can be digitized and included. You can incorporate anecdotes, photos, and even audio & video recordings of family members. Information from these varied sources can then be linked to various family members and to specific facts pertaining to these individuals. Mike mentioned the use of several fonts including the Cyrillic font to document original family names and places of origin.

Jerry Fikis spoke about current industry trends and mentioned that the future of genealogical software is toward "mobile" device applications. He gave several examples using the "Reunion" software package where information can be input through either an iPad, iPhone or laptop/desktop and updates would be instantly synchronized with all other devices. This can be of great advantage when research information is needed to be accessed and/or updated away from home.

It was noted that these mobile device applications often use the digital "cloud" for permanent or temporary storage -- which can be a great advantage as the "cloud" can provide an effective back-up for your valuable information. Jerry compared various computer packages and indicated that all genealogy software today provides essentially the same capabilities, including report generation, Internet functionality and input/export functions but did emphasize that packages have a 'life span' and some can be expected to disappear with the transition to mobile formats. He also stressed the need for computer security and to check security options when selecting various genealogical software.

The session was followed by a questions and answer period that indicated the need for further sessions on this interesting and useful subject.

The Canadian Institute of Ukrainian Studies

The Canadian Institute of Ukrainian Studies (CIUS) at the University of Alberta is increasing its outreach to the Ukrainian Canadian community. If you would like to be on the CIUS e-distribution list, please e-mail Halyna Klid at: ciouscomm@ualberta.ca with the subject heading 'subscribe' or phone 780.492.2026.
