April 26 Meeting

*Documentary film by James Motluk:
"A Place Called Shandro".*

During this meeting, the members viewed the documentary "A Place Called Shandro." This film was produced by James Motluk, who is a professional documentary maker from Toronto. One of his previous productions was "Jajo's Secret," dealing with the internment of his grandfather during the First World War.

Documentary Film: A Place Called Shandro

The film was shot on location in the Shandro district and at the Ukrainian Cultural Heritage Village, east of Edmonton, Alberta. The film also includes material from the Village's Research Programme. The documentary chronicles the settlement of east central Alberta at the turn of the twentieth century by immigrants from Galicia (Halychyna) then part of the Austro-Hungarian Empire.

The film is narrated by the voices of actual pioneers and their descendants whose stories of struggle and celebration are brought to life through the cinematography. Radomir Bilash, a specialist in the immigration history of Alberta, explained some of the customs and traditions that disappeared or evolved as the Ukrainian settlers adapted to Canadian conditions.

The film traces the rise and decline of Ukrainian rural communities as family farms were replaced over the decades by large 'factory-farms.' Where there were twenty or thirty family farms, there is now one huge farm. With the decline of population, local services – schools, post offices, stores, churches – disappeared along with the distinct life style that characterized Ukrainian communities.

Attempts are made to preserve aspects of this former society, such as the architectural history, and there is a short description of the private Shandro family museum. The Ukrainian Cultural Heritage Village is also an example of cultural preservation through a 'living museum' approach to history. The presentation was followed by a question and answer period. Several members claimed a connection with the Shandro family and with the Shandro area through their families.

Ukrainian Canadian Film Festival

A series of Ukrainian-oriented films are being shown in the auditorium at St. Paul University on Mail Street. Featuring films about Ukraine, made by Ukrainians or people interested in Ukraine.

This festival provides a forum for screening films that depict the past and current realities and artistic developments in Ukraine-related cinematography. Films are an accessible way to tell our stories and to inform the public when news becomes overwhelming.

For more information about the dates and times of upcoming films, please refer to the following link:
